I – READING (5 marks)

Read the paragraph and answer the following questions.

Educational consultant Dr. James Philips is an expert about how college students learn. Parents pay him hundreds of dollars to give their children advice about how to do well in college. Here are four of Dr. Philip’s tips for success in college.

1. Professors have special “office hours,” which are times when students can come and talk to them. Many students never use this great opportunity. You have to make an appointment. You can ask your professor questions, ask for advice about ideas for papers, or even ask about a test. Talking to your professors tells the professor that you are serious and interested.

2. Students in most U.S. college classes form study groups, which are groups of several students who meet outside class to help each other. If you are a foreign student, this is even more important; you’ll hear the class discussed in native English, which will give you ideas for language you can use in papers or on tests.

3. Don’t try to study everything the night before a test. Experts find that you learn much better if you break your study time into small “blocks” or pieces. For example, study one hour three times a day. Do this for three days. You will remember more than if you study one day for nine hours.

4. Get a good appointment book, which is like a calendar with hours and days of the week. Smart phones also have calendar applications. Write down your assignments (the work you have to do) and the hours each day to work on those assignments. Don’t leave work until the last day.
