I. READING (15 Marks)

A. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow. (8 Marks)

Global communication can help businesses in several ways. First, employees in different parts of the world can all work as a team to solve a problem, create a new product, or attract new customers. The global team can use new technology to communicate with all its members at the same time. In addition, when some team members in one part of the world are sleeping, team members in another part of the world can continue working on the same project. The global workday never ends. Global companies work around the clock. This saves time and increases productively. Global communication also increases productively because it helps companies divide up their jobs and distribute tasks to different companies around the world. One company does not have to complete every part of the job by itself; instead, it can give some parts to other businesses. These are often businesses that can do the jobs better and for a lower price. However, to be successful, the businesses must be in constant communication. One good example is the motorcycle manufacturing industry in China. Hundreds of different companies contribute to the production of motorcycles. Each company has a different role in the process. So they need to communicate quickly and frequently to solve problems and work efficiently. The motorcycle industry in China produces motorcycles faster and a lower price than anywhere else in the world.

PASSAGE B (7Marks)

Starting in the 1950s, television brought events into people’s homes. For the first time, people could see the news as well as hear it. Because it is so real, television can have a very significant influence on people’s ideas and opinions. It has often provided news and information that have led to important changes in society. For example, the Vietnam War was the first war that people could watch on television. Every night on the news, families watched American soldiers and Vietnamese citizens die. As a result, public opinion turned against the war. Finally, this negative news on television every night forced politicians to end the war. Television news has become an event with more powerful influence around the world. In 1980, the television network CNN started to broadcast global news around the clock. In 1991, its impact increased when it became the first television network to broadcast live reports of a war. Twenty-four hours a day, it brought the Gulf war live from Baghdad into people’s homes. Live, around-the-clock news is not limited to CNN anymore; there are many other news networks all over the world. For example, in 1996, Al Jazeera television began to bring news and discussion of world events to the Arabic-speaking world.
